Rabies Clinics Are Scheduled

Special Rabies Clinics will be held on January 27, 1961, at the Following places:

Pamplin Town Office, 12 noon to 1:00 p. m.

Appomattox Clerk's Office, 1:30 to 2:30 p. m.

These clinics are being held, since so many people have expressed the desire for one more clinic before the licensing period is up.

All who bring dogs to be vaccinated are requested to exercise care as to proper parking of cars and trucks in the vicinity of the clinic since quite a traffic hazzard was created at the last clinic in December.

The game warden will be present at the clinic if anyone wishes to bring any stray dogs in.

Homemakers Items

If you neglect lamp shades and bulbs, you're wasting light.

Miss Ruth Jamison, home economist at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, says studies indicate that as much as 30 per cent of the light can be lost because of dust on the bulbs and shades.

She says to dust bulbs or vacuum shades during routine cleaning. A useful trick, too, is to paint the inside of parchment shades with a flat white paint (or you may prefer to use white shoe polish), to lighten up the inside of the shade so it will reflect light on reading or work.

You can wash soiled rayon shades, but before doing so find out whether or not the color is affected by soap. If the color comes off on a white cloth dampened with soap, don't wash it. Also find out if the fabric is glued on. Glued parts will come off in washing.

If the rayon shade is worth the trouble, and will wash, fill a big tub or a bath tub with soapy water. Dip the shade up and down in the tub to remove dirt. Brush exceptionally soiled parts. Rinse the shade to get all the soap out of the fabric. Pat the shade with a turkish towel until nearly all the moisture is gone, then dry in a warm room.

Miss Jamison says lamp shades are to a lamp as a hat to a costume. They can affect the appearance of the entire room. If a shade is damaged or not the right size for the lamp, it would be better to simply buy a suitable shade.

FROZEN BREAD

If retailers sold their bread frozen, bakers could cut two cents a loaf from bread prices, reports the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

One of the most costly jobs in selling bread is the delivery and stocking of shelves by routemen.

Often they call back several times during a day in large stores to see how the supply is holding up.

If bakeries converted to frozen bread, they could cut their delivery cost, researchers believe. Frozen bread could move directly to the frozen food distributors, who in turn would deliver it with their regular orders.

Another advantage of marketing frozen bread is that it doesn't get stale as quickly as the unfrozen product. Stale bread currently costs bakeries as much as 4 per cent of their total sales.

Reducing cost is only one factor to be considered in marketing frozen bread. Some adjustments would be needed all the way along the line from the baker to the retailer. And how well the consumer accepts frozen bread will affect the marketing of it.

Blows Top In Sewer

Philadelphia.- A temporary postman found the Christmas mail rush too much for him.

He continued to receive complaints from people that he was delivering mail to the wrong addresses and he was upset. He later told a United States commissioner at a hearing that he threw 66 pieces of mail down a sewer.

The mail was recovered and after being dried out was delivered.

The confused mailman was held on $500 bail.

Shoots Mules For Deer

Menomonie, Wisc.- Unidentified hunters shot and killed a pair of mules owned by Louis Salzman, a 72-year-old farmer. The hunters made a mistake or else they didn't know what a deer looked like.

Friends, neighbors and others, including hunters, who lived some distance away, heard of the Salzman's hard luck, and contributed $400 to buy him two more mules.
